

Letter from J. E. Chamberlin to Annie C. Pratt, November 26, 1900, with transcript

Copy of Letter from Mr. J.E. Chamberlin to Mrs. A.C. Pratt, written Nov. 26, 1900, and received the same day, at noon. Mrs. Pratt went to Wrentham from Boston on the 3.27 P.M. train. She found Mrs. Chamberlin in bed and quite ill, she was exceedingly nervous, very much disturbed and excited. Mrs. When Mr. C. returned at evening from Boston, he found his wife's condition much improved. A.C.P. On the train, Monday morning. Dear Mrs. Pratt:

Mrs. Chamberlin came home Saturday night ver ill, and though she is now in less pain, she is completely prostrated, and nervously in a bad condition.

She longs to see you, and though I know how busy you are, I am going to beg of you to come out to see her if you can. She is racked and torn with the thought that Annie and Helen have turned their backs on her, and I am sure you are the one who can help her to look at all matters sides of this matter. You may not be aware # # # # # and I have fears.

Come if you can, and come prepared to stay over night— never mind the preparations, but come and stay all night anyway. Trains leave the South Station for Wrentham at 7.27 A.M., 12.27, P.M. 3.27, 5.27, 6.27, I enclose a ticket.

I would not urge you so, if I did not feel that some one who knows about this and has sympathy with Ida, must come !

Yours very truly, (signed) J.E.Chamberlin.
